James Bond's Seamaster for Spectre available as a limited edition

Lead

Since 'Goldeneye', an Omega has been bonded to the wrist of everyone's favourite secret agent. With the launch of the latest movie imminent, the watchmaker has revealed a special timepiece that non-agents can own: the Seamaster 300 'Spectre' Limited Edition...

New Bond, familiar face

Indeed, the Spectre Seamaster released to the public is identical to the model worn by Daniel Craig in the Bond film of the same name, and will go on sale ahead of the movie's release this autumn. With a design modelled on the original Seamaster that became famous in the 1950s – a watch rightly considered to be one of the outstanding timepieces of the 20th Century – the Spectre special will be limited to 7,007 examples. Of course, it boasts some special details to differentiate it from the standard Seamaster 300, such as the 'Spectre' logo and serial number found on the caseback, and the 007 logo emblazoned on the clasp of the grey-and-black NATO strap. Available in September, the Seamaster 300 Spectre Limited Edition will cost around 6,000 euros – and will be a lot cheaper (and easier to acquire) than an Aston Martin DB10, another of Bond's new tools of the spy trade.
