

CLASSIC DRIVER

Kremer's first road car is the 1979 Le Mans winner reincarnate

Lead

It seems as if 2017 is the year of retro-inspired models, and not to be left behind, Kremer has released one of its own. A year after it released the custom-bodied Porsche 911 GT3 Cup race car, the new road-legal Kremer K3R has debuted and it's the rebirth of the marque's 1979 Le Mans winner...

New old

When Kremer Racing brought out its custom-bodied Porsche 911 GT3 Cup race car last year, they promised one for the road as well — and a year later, it's finally here. Like its racing counterpart, Kremer's first ever road car, the K3R, is modelled after the Le Mans-winning 1979 Kremer Porsche 935 K3. Although based on the Porsche 997 Turbo, the K3R doesn't look it, as its custom body features a slant nose, beefy squared-off fender flares, a massive rear wing, and a length and width approximately 500mm wider and 100mm longer than the standard model, respectively. While the specially tuned Bilstein sports suspension is new as well, the car is fitted with a standard 997 bi-turbo engine and the basic interior, both of which can be upgraded, converted, and personalised at an additional cost — although the base price has yet to be announced. If you already own a 997 and want it Kremer-fied, the company is also willing to upgrade and convert it for you. With so many options, it's a matter of just picking what best suits you...

Photos: Sian Loyson for Kremer Racing

Gallery

Source URL: <https://www.classicdriver.com/en/article/cars/kremers-first-road-car-1979-le-mans-winner-reincarnate>
© Classic Driver. All rights reserved.