Rossi SixtySix: Yesterday's cues, today's performance

Due to the popularity of Chevrolet's enduring muscle car, many owners choose to modify their Corvettes to make them stand out from the crowd. But PureRossi took this idea a step further with its SixtySix - essentially a C6 model with entirely new coachwork. The Detroit-based coachbuilder took all its favourite design cues from across the Corvette's multiple generations - including the legendary split window from the '63 model - and incorporated them into its own design. To see the SixtySix in its natural environment, take a look at our photo gallery.
